The world in brief

Catch up quickly on the global stories that matter

Photograph: POOL/AFP via Getty Images

Israel launched a new wave of strikes against Iran. Earlier Binyamin Netanyahu, Israel's prime minister, said his government acted alone when it hit Iran's segment of the South Pars gas field. He agreed to "hold off" on further strikes on Iranian gas fields at Donald Trump's request. Mr Netanyahu also claimed that American-Israeli strikes had destroyed Iran's capability to enrich uranium and make ballistic missiles.

Brent crude, which briefly topped $119 a barrel on Thursday, fell below $107 following Mr Netanyahu's comments. Scott Bessent, America's treasury secretary, said the Trump administration would consider easing sanctions on Iranian oil at sea in a bid to calm volatile energy markets. On Friday Iran launched strikes against Bahrain, Kuwait and the United Arab Emirates, after pledging to expand attacks on the Gulf's energy infrastructure.

Mr Trump said Japan was "stepping up" support in the Iran war "unlike NATO", during a friendly meeting in Washington with Takaichi Sanae. He did not elaborate. Japan's prime minister condemned Iranian strikes and warned the global economy would take "a huge hit" from the conflict. But things took an awkward turn after Mr Trump compared America's attack on Iran to Japan's bombing of Pearl Harbour in 1941.

Denmark reportedly began preparations to blow up airport runways in Greenland in January in case America invaded the Arctic island. In addition to deploying troops, Denmark reportedly sent blood supplies to treat people who could be wounded during a conflict. Crisis was averted after Mr Trump accepted the outline of a "future deal" with Denmark over the island.

Prosecutors in New York charged Wally Liaw, a co-founder of Supermicro, an American tech firm, with allegedly violating export controls by smuggling $2.5bn-worth of servers containing Nvidia chips to China. Two others affiliated with Supermicro were also charged. It is one of American law enforcement's biggest cases yet involving the alleged smuggling of Nvidia's chips into China. Shares in Supermicro fell by 12% in after-hours trading.

EU leaders failed to convince Hungary's prime minister, Viktor Orban, to approve a €90bn ($103bn) loan package to Ukraine at a summit in Brussels. Hungary and Slovakia accuse Ukraine of delaying repairs to the Druzhba oil pipeline, which crosses its territory and was damaged in a drone attack in January. "We are ready to support Ukraine when we get our oil," said Mr Orban.

Several people, including four flight attendants, were injured after a Delta Airlines flight from Los Angeles to Sydney encountered "brief turbulence". The plane landed as planned on Friday morning. Climate change is changing atmospheric conditions, which is making turbulence worse. In 2024 one passenger died and dozens were injured aboard a Singapore Airlines flight from Singapore to London.

Figure of the day: 7.2%, the amount by which Cuba's GDP is forecast to shrink in 2026. Read the full story.

Photograph: Reuters

Iranians' unhappy new year

In Iran, this weekend should have been festive. Unusually, the spring festival of Nowruz coincides with Eid, which marks the end of Ramadan. Iranians would normally flock to seaside resorts or picnic in the mountains. Instead, many are sheltering in stairwells, worn down by three weeks of bombardment. America claims to have struck 7,000 targets; Israel thousands more. More than 3,000 Iranians have been killed, including at least 1,300 civilians, according to HRANA, a human-rights group.

But America and Israel have not succeeded in triggering their promised popular uprising. America appears to have stepped back from its initial pursuit of regime change. However, Israel and Reza Pahlavi, the former Shah's son, continue to urge Iranians to take to the streets, most recently for this week's fire festival, ahead of Nowruz. So far their calls have not been answered. Instead Israel created fireworks by bombing the South Pars gas field, which supplies much of Iran's fuel.

Photograph: Reuters

A spying scandal hangs over Slovenia's election

As Friday ends Slovenia will plunge into electoral silence ahead of its vote on Sunday. The final week of campaigning has been anything but quiet. Local media alleged that Janez Jansa (pictured), the populist opposition leader, met with operatives from Black Cube, an Israeli political-intelligence firm. Their report suggests Black Cube published footage earlier this month that appeared to implicate several people connected to the government in corruption. Those captured in the videos deny wrongdoing; Black Cube did not respond to our request for comment.

Mr Jansa, a three-time prime minister and an ally of Viktor Orban, Hungary's strongman, denies being part of a plot, but says the footage shows the government is crooked. His party praised Black Cube for purportedly exposing graft. Robert Golob, the liberal prime minister, has warned of foreign interference. Slovenia's election may now hinge on whether voters are more concerned by what the videos revealed, or by who made them.

Photograph: Reuters

Two controversial SCOTUS cases to watch

On Friday, America's Supreme Court will rule on at least one of its 27 outstanding cases. If they pick either of the two that have been pending longest, expect sparks to fly.

Louisiana v Callais concerns the future of the Voting Rights Act of 1965. In 2013 the court gutted the law's "preclearance" provision which had required states with a history of racist electoral practices to get federal approval before changing their voting laws. Callais threatens to go further by making it harder to challenge discriminatory electoral maps. That could allow Republicans to redraw districts and boost their prospects in both state legislatures and the House of Representatives.

Chiles v Salazar, meanwhile, asks whether Colorado can ban "conversion therapy" for LGBT minors. Challengers argue that the state's current law violates the First Amendment by prohibiting licensed therapists from trying to change young people's sexual orientation or gender identity. A ruling in their favour could imperil similar rules in 22 other states.

Photograph: AP

Excitement and anxiety at BTS's return

The world's biggest boyband is back. BTS released their long-anticipated new album on Friday. In 2019 the K-pop act became the first band since the Beatles to have three chart-topping albums in under a year. But in 2022 the group—whose full name translates as "Bulletproof Boy Scouts"—took a break to complete their mandatory military service. Some 260,000 fans, many from abroad, are expected to attend their free comeback concert in Seoul on Saturday. It will also be live-streamed on Netflix.

Such a popular event will benefit the local economy. Yet Koreans are jittery about the arrival of the ARMY (as the group's global fans are known). The city is still haunted by the deadly crowd crush which killed more than 150 Halloween revellers in 2022. Officials are closing roads, rerouting public transport, shutting nearby attractions and dispatching thousands of police around Saturday's show. The capital is determined to have only happy memories of BTS's return.

Photograph:

Data bite: Who will expensive energy hurt most?

Some emerging economies are more vulnerable to global energy shocks than others. To judge which are likely to suffer most from the current crisis, we measured countries' reliance on imported energy and on aid and remittances from the Gulf. We also sized up their foreign-exchange reserves. Pakistan and Egypt are in trouble: both import a lot of oil and gas; their stock of foreign exchange is low. Better off are two other big energy importers: Nepal, which has plenty of hard currency, and Thailand, which has large oil reserves. Bangladesh and Sri Lanka rely less on energy imports, but their foreign-currency cushions are thin. Read our analysis.

The insulated and the isolated

Emerging markets, exposure and resilience to Iran war oil shock, 2024 or latest

*Based on foreign-exchange reserves & external government debt †Based on net oil & gas imports, oil & gas imports from the Middle East & Gulf remittances Sources: UN; World Bank; IMF; national statistics; The Economist

Illustration: Sandra Navarro

Daily quiz

We will serve you a new question each weekday. On Friday your challenge is to give us all five answers and tell us the theme. Email your responses (and your home city and country) by 1700 GMT on Friday to . We'll pick three winners at random and crown them on Saturday.

Friday: Which 1950 novel by Ray Bradbury is set on another planet?

Thursday: What word is used for a demand that must be met within a set period of time?

The spirit of truth and the spirit of freedom—these are the pillars of society.

Henrik Ibsen