The world in brief

Catch up quickly on the global stories that matter

Photograph: Reuters

Israel claimed it killed Alireza Tangsiri (pictured), commander of the navy of Iran's Islamic Revolutionary Guard Corps, in an air strike on Wednesday night. Israel's defence minister, Israel Katz, said Mr Tangsiri was "directly responsible" for the "bombing and blocking the Strait of Hormuz", which has disrupted global oil supplies for weeks. Mr Katz said several other Iranian naval officials were killed in the attack.

The OECD warned that global growth would be weakened by the energy shock. The organisation predicted GDP would rise by 2.9% in 2026. It cut Britain's growth forecast for 2026 from 1.2% to 0.7%, the steepest downgrade of any G7 country. The OECD also warned of higher inflation, with prices in America expected to increase by 4.2% this year, up from 2.6% in 2025.

Donald Trump insisted that Iran is desperate to reach a peace deal, despite public denials from its regime. At a dinner for Republican donors, Donald Trump said Iran's leaders are "afraid" to admit to talks "because they figure they'll be killed by their own people". Iran's foreign minister said his country was exchanging messages with America through third countries, but that it had "no intention of negotiating" on Mr Trump's 15-point ceasefire proposal "for now".

The European Parliament approved a trade deal with America, with some conditions. Lawmakers voted to delay EU tariff cuts until America lowers its rate on most European goods to 15%, as promised. A new clause gives the EU the right to scrap the agreement if America threatens member states' sovereignty, a nod to Mr Trump's desire to seize Greenland, a Danish territory.

Bonuses on Wall Street reached an all-time high in 2025 as a rebound in mergers and acquisitions boosted profits, according to estimates by Thomas DiNapoli, New York's state comptroller. The average bonus rose by 6%; payouts totalled a record $49.2bn. But Mr DiNapoli warned that "slower job growth" and "geopolitical conflicts" would soon start to weigh Wall Street down.

Belarus's autocratic president, Alexander Lukashenko, flew to Pyongyang to meet Kim Jong Un, North Korea's dictator. The two countries are important allies of Russia and support its war against Ukraine. Mr Kim has supplied Vladimir Putin, Russia's leader, with troops for his invasion. Mr Lukashenko laid a wreath on Mr Putin's behalf at Kumsusan mausoleum, where North Korea's former leaders lie.

Workers found a skeleton beneath a church in Maastricht that may belong to D'Artagnan, the French soldier who inspired the hero in Alexandre Dumas's novel, "The Three Musketeers". The swashbuckler was killed during a siege of the Dutch city in 1673. A French coin from 1660 and a musket ball buried nearby point to a possible match. Archaeologists will compare DNA from the remains with D'Artagnan's descendants.

Figure of the day: $2.3bn, the value of De Beers, a diamond company, down from $12.75bn in 2011. Read about why

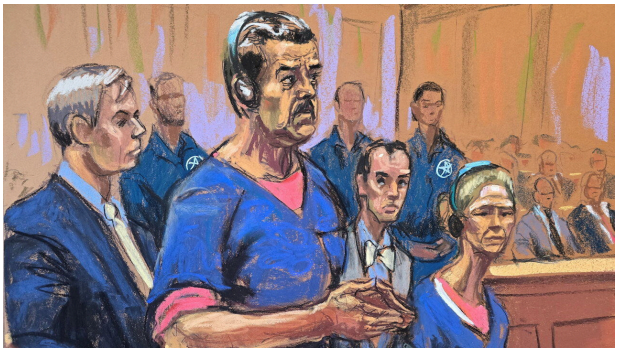
Botswana’s effort to buy a bigger chunk of De Beers could backfire.

Photograph: Getty Images

The known unknown for America and Iran

Donald Trump's claim that Iran is negotiating with America to end the war and that it has given America a "very big present" relating to oil and gas should be treated with a large dose of scepticism. It is neither clear who his Iranian interlocutors are—nor whether, if they do exist, they have any influence.

The negotiations are reportedly based on a 15-point plan drawn up last year, when the two countries sought to reach an agreement on Iran's nuclear programme, among other things. Iran's state media has mocked the president's claim. On Wednesday a military spokesperson said that Mr Trump was "negotiating with himself". Meanwhile thousands more US Marines as well as troops from the 82nd Airborne Division are on their way to the region. It is uncertain whether Mr Trump wants to de-escalate or simply calm jittery markets before beginning a new stage of the war. His inconsistency suggests he may not know himself.



Photograph: Reuters

Nicolás Maduro back in the dock

On Thursday Nicolás Maduro, Venezuela's former president, and his wife, Cilia Flores, are expected to appear before a judge in New York for the second time. The Trump administration, which seized the couple in Caracas on January 3rd, accuses Mr Maduro of four crimes, including conspiracy to commit "narco-terrorism" and to smuggle cocaine into America. Ms Flores is accused of similar crimes. Both deny the accusations.

At this hearing the defence will urge the judge to dismiss the case. They argue that the Trump administration has interfered by blocking the couple's access to Venezuelan government funds to pay their legal fees. The judge is highly unlikely to throw out the case. But this is only an early skirmish in a long and complex legal war. Vast reams of evidence must be gathered and shared, and then a trial date set. America's capture of Mr Maduro and Ms Flores was sudden and swift. Their trial will probably be anything but.

Illustration: David Simonds

Northern Europe strengthens its defences

On Thursday leaders of countries in the Joint Expeditionary Force, a northern European military alliance, gather in Helsinki. They will discuss their support for Ukraine and the overall state of European security. The British-led club has stepped up efforts to deter Russian aggression in the Baltic Sea, the North Atlantic and the Arctic. In September it will hold joint naval, air and land exercises, called Lion Protector, across Norway, Iceland and the Danish straits. It hopes to improve collaboration to protect infrastructure and to align command-and-control capabilities.

The Trump administration has been calling on Europe to do more to protect the High North. The JEF gives Britain a way to show leadership of Europe's response. The country is set to assume command of NATO's Atlantic and Arctic headquarters from America, and has committed more troops to defending the Nordic region. That may not placate Donald Trump, who has been berating Britain's prime minister, Sir Keir Starmer, for failing to back America's war on Iran.

Joint Expeditionary Force members
Iceland
Finland
Russia
Norway
Estonia
Sweden
Latvia
Denmark
Lithuania
Ireland
Netherlands
Belarus
Britain
Poland
Germany
Ukraine
Bel.
Czech Rep.
Lux.
Slovakia
Aust.
Hung.
France
Romania

Photograph: Alamy

Novo weighs its future

Novo Nordisk holds its annual general meeting on Thursday at a difficult moment. The Danish drugmaker pioneered a new class of weight-loss medicines with the launch of Wegovy in 2021. Yet it has lost ground to Eli Lilly, an American rival. Lilly's weight-loss drug, Zepbound, now outsells Wegovy by more than two to one in America. Meanwhile, cheap copycats are conquering markets such as India and China, where patent protection for semaglutide, Wegovy's active ingredient, has expired. Novo's share price has fallen by more than three-quarters from its peak in June 2024.

The firm is fighting back. An oral version of Wegovy, launched in America in January, has been popular, though Lilly is expected to introduce its own pill soon. Novo has also struck a deal with Hims, a telehealth firm, which will now sell Wegovy instead of copycat versions of the slimming jab. Investors in Novo will hope to hear that the worst is over.

Shedding the pounds

Novo Nordisk, share price, $

Source: LSEG Workspace

Photograph: Anna Maria Maiolino/Regina Vater

A lively show about ageing

Want to live longer? You're in luck: the effort to slow human ageing, long associated with quackery, is now all the rage. Serious-minded scientists and self-interested billionaires alike are looking to develop cutting-edge treatments to prolong lifespans.

A show opening on Thursday at the Wellcome Collection in London is one of the first museum exhibitions to explore the theme of ageing in science and culture. "The Coming of Age" displays objects such as a silver sake cup—the sort that Japan awarded to centenarians for decades, until they grew too numerous for the government to sustain the expense—and a walking stick carved from whalebone that was once owned by Charles Darwin. Artworks and vintage advertising show how contemporary beliefs about ageing have been shaped. A clip of "Don't Die", a documentary about Bryan Johnson, a venture capitalist who wants to live forever, plays on loop. The whimsical show fittingly bursts with life.

Illustration: Sandra Navarro

Daily quiz

We will serve you a new question each weekday. On Friday your challenge is to give us all five answers and tell us the theme. Email your responses (and your home city and country) by 1700 GMT on Friday to . We'll pick three winners at random and crown them on Saturday.

Thursday: In poker, what is the term for a hand that contains three of a kind and a pair?

Wednesday: What is the term for the annual celebration that occurs in many countries when the crops have been gathered?

Competitions are for horses, not artists.

Bela Bartok