

Catch up: Israel widens ground offensive in Lebanon; Chinese stocks rally

Israel said it had begun a “limited, localised, targeted” ground operation in south-west Lebanon and that it had “eliminated” Suhail Hussein Hussein, the commander of Hizbullah’s headquarters, in an overnight air strike on Beirut. Hizbullah is yet to comment. Israel has targeted high-ranking members of the Iran-backed militant group in recent strikes: Hassan Nasrallah, its leader, was killed in an attack on the Lebanese capital’s southern suburbs last month. Meanwhile Iran’s foreign minister, Abbas Araghchi, warned Israel that any attack on its infrastructure would be avenged.

Chinese stocks hit their highest level in more than two years on the first day of trading after a week-long holiday. The CSI 300 index quickly rose by 10.8%, but the rally dwindled after a briefing by the country’s top economic planner failed to reveal more stimulus, disappointing investors. Meanwhile the World Bank forecast that China’s economy would grow at 4.8% this year, shy of the country’s own forecast of “around 5%”.

Samsung Electronics, a chipmaking giant, admitted it was in “crisis” and apologised to investors after reporting disappointing results. South Korea’s most valuable company faces concerns that it is losing ground to rivals in the production of both logic chips (which process information) and memory chips (which store it). Its share price has fallen by nearly 30% in the past six months.

Ukraine’s foreign minister, Andrii Sybiha, said that Russia had bombed two cargo ships docked in the Black Sea port of Odessa. One was carrying corn and was bound for Italy, he said. A port worker was reportedly killed. Meanwhile, Kamala Harris said she would not hold bilateral talks with Vladimir Putin to end the war, were she to become president. She insisted that Ukraine must be represented in any negotiations.

Hurricane Milton, which is expected to make landfall on Florida’s west coast on Wednesday evening, weakened to a Category 4 storm. State officials are preparing for the largest evacuation effort in years. Florida and several other south-eastern states are still recovering from Hurricane Helene, a category 4 storm that hit on September 26th and killed at least 227 people.

The party of Narendra Modi, India’s prime minister, looks set to win in regional elections in Haryana, a northern state. That would be a boost for the Bharatiya Janata Party, which lost its majority national elections in June. But in Jammu & Kashmir, another northern region, exit polls suggest a win for Congress, the opposition.

Interpol and police from six European countries will reopen 46 cold cases involving unidentified women, many of whom were murdered or died in suspicious circumstances. This follows the success of “Identify Me”, an initiative launched by Interpol in 2023. It led to the identification of a British woman murdered in Belgium 31 years ago.

Figure of the day: 67, the number of countries that have already held national elections this year. Read the full story.

The BJP's big test in north India

In general elections in June, Indian voters handed Narendra Modi a stunning rebuke by stripping the prime minister's Bharatiya Janata Party of its parliamentary majority. Mr Modi insists that ruling in a coalition has not changed his party's plans. But his new government has withdrawn a series of politically important initiatives under pressure from an emboldened opposition. On Tuesday the BJP could face yet more setbacks when results from regional elections in Haryana and Jammu & Kashmir are revealed.

Early counting suggested that the BJP would win comfortably in Haryana but lose J&K. The latter result was expected: the Hindu-nationalist party is not popular in the Muslim-majority region. But the BJP's win in Haryana is more surprising. While the party has been in power there for a decade, exit polls had pointed to a victory for Congress, the national opposition. The results are a reminder that despite the setback in the general election, the BJP remains hugely popular in parts of the country.

Brazil's new central bank chief

On Tuesday Brazil's Senate is expected to confirm Gabriel Galipolo as the next head of the country's central bank. The nomination of Mr Galipolo, the bank's director of monetary policy, by President Luiz Inácio Lula da Silva initially caused jitters among some analysts. Lula has accused the central bank's current head, Roberto Campos Neto, of thwarting economic growth by keeping interest rates high.

Many economists retort that government policy is making it harder to cut rates. Strong growth is partly explained by unsustainable public spending. Lula has raised the minimum wage above inflation, among other boons. The labour market is also tight. All this is putting pressure on inflation: the annual rate is 4.2%. The central bank's target is just 3%.

The bank has therefore broken from regional trends. It raised the interest rate by a quarter-point to 10.75% in September, and signalled further increases. Mr Galipolo voted in favour of the rise, showing his independence from the government—for now.

Political drama in Kenya

The political fallout from Kenya's massive Gen-Z protests has reached the top echelons of the government. Rigathi Gachagua, the deputy president, is due in parliament on Tuesday to defend himself against impeachment charges brought by his own colleagues. Mr Gachagua was until recently a close ally of William Ruto, the president. He is now blamed for provoking the protests in June, which left at least 40 people dead and severely damaged the administration's international standing.

The motion against the deputy president, which was drawn up by members of Mr Ruto's coalition and backed by 83% of MPs, accuses him of stirring up ethnic hatred, corruption and undermining the government. Voters are gripped by the drama, and in recent days many across the country have turned up to debate the motion in public forums facilitated by the authorities. But for a beleaguered government struggling to tackle Kenya's crippling national debt, the furore seems like a suspiciously convenient distraction.

Dynasties at odds in the Philippines

Tuesday is the deadline for registering candidates for the Philippines' congressional elections. The vote in May 2025 will come halfway through President Ferdinand “Bongbong” Marcos’s six-year term. Congress is dominated by Mr Marcos’s dynasty. (He is the son of a despot, also called Ferdinand Marcos.) The final list of candidates will show whether supporters of another dynasty, led by Sara Duterte, the vice-president and daughter of Rodrigo Duterte, a former president, intend to loosen his hold.

In 2022 the two dynasties formed an uneasy alliance: Ms Duterte stood for the vice-presidency, which is voted on separately, with a rumoured understanding that she would run for the top job in 2028. Now they are drifting apart. Opinion polls indicate that Ms Duterte can win the election without Mr Marcos’s help. But she still needs Mr Marcos to shield her father from prosecution over the deaths of drug suspects killed while he was president.

Anna Weyant's darkly playful art

Born in 1995, Anna Weyant has been feted as the “millennial Botticelli”. Her figurative paintings invite you to come closer, to approach from different angles, to turn your head upside down. Her works often experiment with shadows and reflections and usually have a darkly playful aspect to them. “Loose Screw”, which sold for $1.5m in 2022, depicts a smiling woman holding a wine glass. In time you notice her hand is bandaged.

On Tuesday Gagosian will host Ms Weyant’s first exhibition in London, “Who’s Afraid of the Big Bad Wolves?”, made up of seven new works. (The gallery has represented her since 2022; she was in a relationship with Larry Gagosian, its founder, 50 years her senior, for some time.) One is a painting-within-a-painting: a portrait of a round-faced woman rests, upturned, against a wall. In another a reader stretches out a huge, blank newspaper—rendering them unaware of an approaching figure. As the title of the show attests, these paintings tell stories.

Daily quiz

The Economist

We will serve you a new question each day this week. On Friday your challenge is to give us all five answers and, as important, tell us the connecting theme. Email your responses (and include mention of your home city and country) by 1700 GMT on Friday to QuizEspresso@economist.com. We'll pick randomly from those with the right answers and crown three winners on Saturday.

Tuesday: What is the mechanism on a canal that allows the water level to be raised or lowered?

Monday: Which film from 1991 featured Patrick Swayze as the leader of a group of surfers who were also bank robbers?

The number of countries that have already held national elections this year.

Read the full story.

Those who adhere to the past won't be able to cope with the future.

Willy Brandt