

Catch up: Israel strikes Lebanon; Harris's fundraising haul

Binyamin Netanyahu, Israel's prime minister, cut short his trip to America. He attended a meeting of Israel's cabinet on Sunday to discuss how to respond to a rocket strike that killed 12 young people on a football pitch in the Golan heights. Israel's first response to the attack, the deadliest on an area under Israeli control since fighting between Israel and Hamas broke out last October, was to launch strikes overnight on Lebanon. Mr Netanyahu said that Hizbullah, an Iran-backed, Lebanon-based militant group, would "pay a heavy price". Hizbullah denied targeting the town.

The presidential campaign of Kamala Harris raised $200m since she announced her intention to run last week. Most of the donations came from people who had not in this election cycle contributed to Joe Biden, who withdrew and endorsed Ms Harris. She has also had the backing of several billionaires, including Reed Hastings, the co-founder of Netflix, who has reportedly donated $7m to a pro-Harris super PAC.

During a meeting with Li Qiang, China's prime minister, Giorgia Meloni, Italy's prime minister, promised to “relaunch...bilateral co-operation” with China. The two officials signed a three-year action plan to improve the countries' relations. Ms Meloni will also meet Xi Jinping, China's president, during her five-day trip. Ms Meloni withdrew her country from China's Belt and Road Initiative last year.

A Ukrainian drone attack caused fires in oil-storage depots in the Kursk region in south-western Russia, according to its governor. Alexei Smirnov said that blazes at some of the tanks were quickly extinguished. Nobody was injured. Meanwhile, Russia said its forces had taken control of Lozuvatske, a settlement in Ukraine's Donetsk region. Russian forces have been pressing hard in eastern Ukraine.

Bangladesh's government said it would end the country's internet shutdown on Sunday. It had imposed the blackout on July 18th after university students came out in protest against a jobs quota in the civil service. The government sent in armed troops, and imposed a nationwide curfew enforced by a shoot-to-kill order. Hundreds died and thousands were injured.

A wildfire in northern California, allegedly caused by an arson attack on Wednesday, ripped through more than 350,000 acres (142,000 hectares). The blaze is the biggest in the state this year. Another, in Oregon, had destroyed nearly 290,00 acres by Friday. Wildfires in the Canadian province of Alberta this week burned through Jasper, a tourist town. Images from the aftermath show melted cars and disintegrated homes.

Simone Biles, an American gymnast, began her campaign at the Paris Olympics in style, leading in the all around standings after the first day of competition. Ms Biles, the most decorated gymnast in history, pulled out of the 2020 Olympics after suffering with the “twisties”. But last year she won four world titles. In Paris, she has a good chance to take home another gold-medal haul.

Will Israel avoid all-out war with Hizbullah?

Since October Israel and Hizbullah, a Lebanon-based militant group, have stuck to unwritten rules in their low-intensity war. But those were shattered on Saturday, when a rocket hit a football pitch in the Golan Heights, killing 12 young people. Hizbullah was quick to deny it fired the rocket, but it almost certainly did.

The strike has increased pressure on Binyamin Netanyahu, the prime minister, to act decisively against the Iran-backed group. But military planners are still anxious not to be dragged into an all-out war. The options being discussed aim to stop short of that, but even those could provoke Hizbullah to try to use its long-range missiles to strike population centres in Israel. The threat of escalation could prove beneficial if it incentivises Israel to agree to a pause in its disastrous war in Gaza. A ceasefire could prompt Hizbullah to suspend its attacks on Israel. That might be the only way for Israel to avoid a war on multiple fronts.

The EU's top diplomat visits Vietnam

On Monday Josep Borrell, the EU's foreign-policy representative, visits Hanoi for the second time in two weeks. Last Thursday he attended the funeral of Nguyen Phu Trong, who had been Vietnam's main leader since 2011. The EU has a free-trade agreement with Vietnam and is its fourth-biggest trading partner, after China, America and South Korea.

Mr Borrell will be focusing on climate and security issues. A package of aid and loans from the G7 to help Vietnam shift away from coal and towards renewable energy, announced last October, has yet to have much effect. Vietnam has ignored Western sanctions against Russia, its traditional arms supplier; Vladimir Putin visited in June. Mr Borrell will reaffirm that the EU opposes Chinese claims of sovereignty over almost all of the South China Sea. That may please Vietnam's acting leader, To Lam, who will probably succeed Trong. But Mr Lam, a conservative former security minister, is unlikely to move the country closer to the West.

McDonald's in a food coma

America's biggest fast-food chain reports its second-quarter earnings on Monday. Analysts think gross operating profits grew 13% compared with the second quarter in 2023; but revenue probably rose by just 2% because higher prices put off consumers. Analysts will be watching the earnings report especially closely because McDonald's missed forecasts in the first quarter of 2024 for the first time in two years.

To lure back low-income customers who are eating out less, in late June McDonald's started offering $5 deals on meals consisting of a sandwich, fries, chicken nuggets and a soft drink. Burger King, its closest rival, matched the offer, setting off a price war. Sales at McDonald's stores in America have probably increased by a meagre 1.1% quarter on quarter. But the chain is suffering elsewhere. In the Middle East boycotts by pro-Palestinian movements, which see the golden arches as an extension of America, Israel's main protector, have had a "meaningful business impact", said Chris Kempczinski, McDonald's boss.

Egypt's economic turnaround

In February the United Arab Emirates pledged $35bn to develop a section of Egypt's Mediterranean coast, saving the country from imminent economic collapse. That investment unleashed a wave of funding to the country. The International Monetary Fund, which will review Egypt's progress on Monday, promised it a further $5bn. The EU pledged a €7.4bn ($8bn) aid package; the World Bank offered $6bn.

Since then Egypt's government has shifted its economic policy. In March it finally allowed its struggling pound to sink to 50 against the dollar. To tame inflation, it raised its main interest rate to 27.25%. In July the government of Abdel-Fattah al-Sisi, the president, appointed Ahmed Kouchouk, a former economist at the World Bank, as finance minister. The IMF, which in February had already bailed out the government four times, says Egypt is making progress. But Mr Sisi has a record of balking at serious reform. Only time will tell if this pivot is any different.

Art in Aspen

A new event on the global arts circuit, The Aspen Art Fair, begins on Monday in the tony mountain resort in Colorado. The show, in the Hotel Jerome, a downtown landmark, features 30 exhibitors from a dozen countries. The new fair is the prelude to a bigger event, the annual Aspen ArtWeek, which begins on Tuesday.

This year's city-wide celebration includes Intersect Aspen, a rival art show. Intersect will exhibit works from 30 galleries in a converted ice rink. Among them will be a giant noodle-like stainless steel sculpture, by Gino Miles, a New Mexico-based sculptor. It is on sale for a cool $700,000.

For socialites, the week's high point will be the Aspen ArtCrush, a gala dinner and auction of donated artworks that raises funds for the local museum. Last year's take, a reported $3.8m, hints that the surrounding Rockies are not the only big piles in and around Aspen.
