

The world in brief, July 15th 2024

Donald Trump called on Americans to “stand united” and not to allow “evil to win” after surviving an assassination attempt on Saturday. The FBI identified the shooter, who died at the scene, as Thomas Matthew Crooks, a 20-year-old from Pennsylvania. He shot at the former president with an AR-15 rifle, and reportedly had materials for making explosives in his car. One spectator was also killed in the shooting, while two were critically injured.

Joe Biden echoed Mr Trump’s call for unity on Sunday afternoon, saying that the assassination attempt was “contrary to everything we stand for as a nation”. He encouraged people not to jump to assumptions about the shooter but rather to “let the FBI do its job”. Mr Biden also said he spoke with Mr Trump, and that he was “sincerely grateful” that the former president was doing well.

Hamas said that it had not withdrawn from ceasefire talks, despite an Israeli strike that it said killed at least 90 people. The target was Muhammad Deif, the Islamist group’s military commander, who planned the attacks on Israel on October 7th. It is unclear whether he survived, though the Israeli armed forces said they had killed Rafa Salama, a close associate of Mr Deif.

Alphabet, Google's parent company, is in talks to acquire Wiz, a cyber-security company, for around $23bn, according to the Wall Street Journal. If terms can be reached, it would be Alphabet's largest acquisition ever. Alphabet, like its fellow big tech companies, has been splurging recently, with much of its expenditure directed towards AI, though its purchase of Wiz is a departure from that trend.

Spain beat England 2-1, scoring in the 86th minute to win the European football championship for a record fourth time. Spain were the superior side throughout, pulling ahead shortly after half time. England equalised, but never looked Spain's equal. The next time England fans sing "Three Lions", a famed football song, probably at the World Cup in 2026, they will be lamenting "60 years of hurt".

Khadga Prasad Sharma Oli, leader of the Communist Party of Nepal, was appointed the country's prime minister. The CPN had been part of the governing coalition until the party withdrew on Friday, causing the government to collapse. Mr Oli, who has been prime minister three times before and will be sworn in on Monday, will lead a coalition with the Nepali Congress party.

Carlos Alcaraz beat Novak Djokovic for a second straight year to win the Wimbledon tennis championship. The 21-year-old Spaniard was dominant throughout the match, taking home his fourth Grand Slam title. The 37-year-old Mr Djokovic was hoping to win his eighth Wimbledon final, which would have seen him equal a record set by Roger Federer, and win his 25th Grand Slam singles title.

171,000, the number of Jews in Argentina. Javier Milei, the Catholic country's "anarcho-capitalist" president, has been embracing Orthodox Judaism. Read the full story.

In the run-up to America's presidential election, we've launched The US in brief—a daily update to help you keep on top of the political stories that matter. Sign up here to receive it as a newsletter, each weekday, in your inbox

China's Third Plenum

On Monday 376 bigwigs from the Chinese Communist Party will gather for its “third plenum”, where they will set economic goals for as far out as 2035. These meetings have yielded important results before. The third plenum in 1978 kicked off economic reforms that led to decades of rapid growth and China’s rise as a superpower.

China’s economy is again in need of serious reform. An ongoing crisis in the property sector, long a driver of the country’s growth, worsened in May when prices for new homes took their biggest fall in nearly a decade. Local governments, no longer able to raise funds through land sales, are taking on debt. Consumer confidence is dismal. And China’s export-focused growth strategy is getting riskier as rich countries put up tariffs. Xi Jinping, the party’s chief, has in the past offered half-measures and empty rhetoric where consistent action was needed. This time he must be bolder.

The Republican Party's dramatic convention

The Republican National Convention convenes on Monday in Milwaukee amid more drama than the organisers of the made-for-TV event could have imagined. They had booked elected officials, Trump-family members, business leaders and celebrities as supporting acts to Donald Trump. His speech, expected on Thursday, was meant to be the event's showstopper. And his long-awaited vice-presidential pick was to finally be revealed. But the attempt to assassinate Mr Trump on July 13th—America's most serious act of political violence in decades—will overshadow that.

In his early statements after the assassination attempt he focused on praising law enforcement and avoided speculating about the motives of the shooter. Will the presidential front-runner echo some members of his party, who blamed the shooting on the Democrats' angry rhetoric about Mr Trump and their claims that he is a wannabe dictator? Or will he offer a unifying message in Milwaukee and attempt to lower the temperature of political discourse?

Biden gets in front of the cameras again

While Donald Trump revels in Republicans' adulation in Milwaukee, heightened by his narrow escape from assassination, Joe Biden will try to calm fears about his candidacy. On Monday NBC will air a pre-taped interview with the president. He has appeared more cogent in recent media appearances than he did on the debate stage on June 27th, but this has not ended a rebellion in his party.

Mr Biden is hoping that the disorganised uprising dissipates. Meanwhile he continues to insist that only he can defeat Mr Trump. Even if voters believe him, that is not their only concern. Among Democratic-leaning voters who want him to step aside, polls say, more than twice as many cite concerns about his fitness for office than worry that he will lose in November. No set-piece interview is likely to persuade them that Mr Biden will stay sharp enough to hold the world's toughest job for the next four years.

Another rigged election in Rwanda

In this year of elections few have a more certain outcome than that of Rwanda on Monday. Paul Kagame, who has in effect run the country since 1994, will almost certainly be re-elected president in a ballot that will be neither free nor fair. A constitutional referendum in 2015—passed with 98% of the vote—means that he can run twice more after this, potentially extending his time in office until 2034. The 66-year-old is going nowhere.

The official line is that Rwanda is peaceful, united and prosperous—a beacon of progress lit from the embers of the genocide that took place 30 years ago. Many African leaders see Mr Kagame's rule as a model. But his repression of his own people and Rwanda's involvement in a war in neighbouring Congo have created enemies at home and abroad. No wonder Mr Kagame would rather not test his popularity by allowing serious candidates to run against him.

A new malaria vaccines offers a jab of hope

For 60 years scientists have tried to develop a vaccine to defend against Plasmodium falciparum, a parasite that causes malaria, which kills around 600,000 people a year. Now two have arrived at once. Both attack the parasite in the first few minutes after it is transmitted via mosquito bite. The first, called RTS,S, was rolled out in Cameroon in January. The second, R21, which can be made in larger volumes at less than half the price, will be launched on Monday in Ivory Coast.

Malaria deaths had been falling, but a decade ago that decline stopped. These vaccines, together with other innovations such as better mosquito nets, should give the fight against the disease a shot in the arm. According to Sania Nishtar, the chief executive of Gavi, a public-private vaccine initiative that is supporting the roll-out, “we have an opportunity to finally turn the tide against this killer disease.”

Daily Quiz

We will serve you a new question each day this week. On Friday your challenge is to give us all five answers and, as important, tell us the connecting theme. Email your responses (and include mention of your home city and country) by 1700 BST on Friday to QuizEspresso@economist.com. We'll pick randomly from those with the right answers and crown three winners on Saturday.

Monday: Which Chekhov play, the last he wrote, focuses on the estate of the Ranevskaya family?

171,000

*the number of Jews in Argentina. Javier Milei, the Catholic country's "anarcho-capitalist" president, has been embracing Orthodox Judaism.
Read the full story.*

I daresay anything can be made holy by being sincerely worshipped.

Iris Murdoch