

The world in brief

Catch up quickly on the global stories that matter

The first National Guard troops arrived in Los Angeles after Donald Trump said he would deploy a force of at least 2,000 to quell protests. The move followed two days of clashes between protesters and federal immigration agents, who arrested more than 40 people in nearby raids. California's governor, Gavin Newsom, called the use of the National Guard "purposefully inflammatory".

Mr Trump said Elon Musk would pay "serious consequences" if he decided to fund challengers to Republicans who vote for the president's "big, beautiful" budget bill. He also said he assumed his relationship with the billionaire was over after their recent public spat. Mr Trump did not specify the action he would take against his former adviser, but Mr Musk's companies have extensive government contracts.

Rwanda said it would withdraw from the Economic Community of Central African States amid growing tensions with its fellow member, Congo. On Saturday the bloc decided to keep Equatorial Guinea in its chairmanship rather than allow Rwanda to assume the role as expected. Rwanda blamed Congo for the snub. ^{M23}, a Rwanda-backed militia, has seized several large cities in eastern Congo.

Israeli troops killed four people near an aid centre in Gaza, according to Palestinian witnesses. Israel's armed forces said it had fired warning shots at a group approaching soldiers. The Gaza Humanitarian Foundation, an organisation backed by America and Israel, said it would open several aid-distribution centres, having blocked deliveries on Saturday. It blamed the closures on threats from Hamas, which the militant group denied.

Italians started voting in a referendum on making it easier for foreigners to gain citizenship. Currently non-EU citizens need to live in Italy for ten years before being eligible for a passport; the referendum would reduce that to five. Italy's hard-right prime minister, Giorgia Meloni, opposes the measure and said she would not vote in the poll, which was brought about by a petition.

Miguel Uribe, a presidential contender in Colombia, was shot in Bogotá. His wife said he was “fighting for his life”. The 39-year-old senator was wounded by “armed subjects” during a campaign event, according to a statement released by the opposition conservative Democratic Center party, to which Mr Uribe belongs. Police arrested a suspect and offered $730,000 for more information.

Carlos Alcaraz successfully defended his title at the French Open. The 22-year-old Spaniard came from two sets down to beat Jannik Sinner, a 23-year-old Italian, in a five-and-a-half-hour match. On Saturday Coco Gauff won the women's title—the first American victory at the tennis tournament in ten years.

Word of the week: kriegstüchtig, German for “war-ready”. The country is spending big to bolster its army—and debating whether citizens must do their bit too. Read the full story.

Photograph: Reuters

Dark clouds over Pride in America

After three weeks of fashion shows, drag story hours and, of course, a spectacular parade, WorldPride officially wraps up on Sunday. Every year the organisers of Pride festivals around the world select a city to host the flagship festival of queer culture. This year it's been Washington, DC.

Dark clouds have loomed over the festival. The Trump administration has made its contempt for queer people, and especially trans women, clear. It has announced measures both significant, such as prohibiting transgender people from military service, and petty, like deciding to announce during Pride month that a ship named for Harvey Milk, a Navy veteran and one of America's first openly gay public officials, would be rechristened. Corporations have sensed which way the wind is blowing—firms that once bragged about their support for Pride have this year fallen silent. Some would-be revelers have been unnerved by all this, but most refused to let the ill political weather ruin their parade. After all, showers bring out the rainbow.

Photograph: Getty Images

The thriving Murdoch empire

As the Murdochs, a family of media magnates, continue their decades-long, multi-billion-dollar family feud, the empire they are fighting over is flourishing. Why are Fox Corporation and News Corp, legacy media companies, so popular with investors?

Start with Fox. Its share value has soared, in large part because of its content mix. In 2019 Fox sold its general-entertainment assets to Disney for $71bn, deciding to focus on news and sport. It was the right call. And News Corp, which holds titles including the Wall Street Journal and the New York Post, is also thriving. That is mainly because the company has a 61% stake in REA Group, a publicly traded Australian property-listing platform.

But change could be on the way. Rupert Murdoch seems determined to pass his empire on to his eldest son, Lachlan. But a challenge by his three siblings could raise the chances of a sale or break-up. That too has stoked enthusiasm for the stocks in some quarters.

Photograph: AP

A star-studded Tonys

It's Broadway's biggest night of the year: the Tony Awards, held at Radio City Music Hall. Nominees include an unusual number of film stars, whose presence in a Broadway production boosts ticket prices. Those up for best actor in a play include Bob Odenkirk, who played the hapless Shelley Levene in David Mamet's bilious "Glengarry Glen Ross", and George Clooney, who played Edward R. Murrow in "Goodnight, and Good Luck". Sarah Snook of "Succession" is up for best actress for playing 26 roles in "The Picture of Dorian Gray".

"John Proctor is the Villain", about a group of high-school students reading Arthur Miller's "The Crucible", is a strong candidate for best play, but may be pipped by "Oh, Mary!", a camp comedy about Abraham and Mary Todd Lincoln. The Tonys are more fun than the Emmys or Oscars, especially if Mr Clooney follows through on his promise to shave his head if his ghastly black dye job from "Good Night" has not grown out by then.

Photograph: Getty Images

A classic match-up on the Paris clay

Since mid-2024 Jannik Sinner (pictured) has become one of the most dominant athletes on the planet. The Italian tennis star has played 50 matches and won 48 of them. He is close to becoming the complete player: his forehand is enormous, his backhand is formidable and his serve has become ever more of a threat. He also appears to have the temperament for the biggest moments, as he has won all three of his Grand Slam finals.

On Sunday, in the French Open final, he plays his fourth, and against the only man to have beaten him during his 50-match run, his great rival Carlos Alcaraz, a young Spaniard who has already won four Grand Slams. This is the first time the pair have met in such a final, so it's the biggest match of their burgeoning rivalry. Given the ease with which Mr Sinner has dispatched his other opponents, tennis needs Mr Alcaraz to play at his best to keep some sense of competition going.

Illustration: The Economist

Quiz Winners

Thank you to everyone who took part in this week's quiz. The winners, chosen at random, were:

Iskriyana Vasileva, Berlin, Germany

Katie Cho, Palo Alto, California, America

Himmat Kalsia, New Delhi, India

They all gave the correct answers of: Diane Keaton, Carla Bruni, Sam, Jimmy Cliff and the norm. The theme is characters from the sitcom "Cheers": Diane Chambers, Carla Tortelli, Sam Malone, Cliff Clavin and Norm Peterson (played by the recently-deceased George Wendt).

The questions were:

Monday: Which actress won an Oscar for her performance in "Annie Hall"?

Tuesday: Which singer was the first lady of France from 2008 to 2012?

Wednesday: What was the name of the character who played the piano in “Casablanca”?

Thursday: Which Jamaican reggae artist sang “Many Rivers To Cross” and “You Can Get It If You Really Want”?

Friday: What is defined in mathematics as the product of a complex number and its conjugate? The term is also used as a synonym for something that is typical.

Illustration: The Economist

Mini crossword

We now publish an interactive edition of our crossword twice a week, allowing you to enter and check the answers, and see explanations, instantly. Try it here. Or, if you prefer to do things the old-fashioned way, use the grid below.

Our crossword has two sets of clues, one for seasoned cruciverbalists and the other for less experienced solvers. Both give the same answers, all of which feature in articles in this week's edition of The Economist:

Cryptic clues

1 across Hurry up! It's a pollster, for crying out loud (6)

2 across Was not cooked standing up? Capital! (6)

3 across Nothing is missing from last educational establishment for ex-chancellor (6)

1 down Lewd register is not right for Dutchman (who is extremely so) (5,7)

Factual clues

1 across Firm whose polling in America showed support for stricter citizenship rules (6)
2 across City whose mayor just lost a presidential election (6)
3 across German who declared a “turning-point” in 2023 (6)
1 down Winner of Netherlands election, who has bailed without achieving much (5,7)

Email all four answers, along with your home city and country, by 9am BST on Monday to [\[email protected\]](#). We will pick randomly from those with the right answers and crown three winners in next week’s edition.

Image: The Economist

It is the vice of a vulgar mind to be thrilled by bigness.

E. M. Forster