

Catch up: Israel vows to fight on; New York's mayor charged

Binyamin Netanyahu, Israel's prime minister, said his country “will not stop” attacks on Hizbullah until “we achieve all our objectives”. Israeli air strikes killed 92 people, including the head of the Lebanese militia's drone force, on Thursday, a day after America, France and their allies proposed a 21-day ceasefire. On Thursday night Lebanon's foreign minister, Abdallah Bouhabib, told the UN general assembly that the crisis “threatens [Lebanon's] very existence”. Mr Netanyahu is due to address the assembly on Friday. Earlier Herzi Halevi, the IDF's chief of staff, told troops that air strikes targeting Hizbullah were intended “to prepare the area for the possibility of your entry”.

Eric Adams, New York City's Democratic mayor, was charged with bribery, fraud and campaign-finance violations. Federal prosecutors accused him of accepting money from “straw” donors and receiving improper perks from at least one Turkish official. Mr Adams allegedly fast-tracked the opening of a Turkish consular building in exchange for flights on Turkey's national airline and rooms at “opulent hotels”. The mayor denies wrongdoing.

Chinese stockmarkets surged during early trading on Friday and were poised to record their best weekly gain in more than 15 years. Investors have been buoyed by the government's recent stimulus efforts, including central-bank support for share purchases. According to Reuters, China is also planning a fiscal boost worth 2trn yuan ($280bn), or about 1.5% of GDP, including handouts to families with two or more children.

Donald Trump said he will meet Volodymyr Zelensky in New York on Friday, despite ongoing tension between Ukraine's president and Republicans. Mr Zelensky publicly denounced J.D. Vance as "too radical" after the vice-presidential nominee outlined his path to peace earlier this month, drawing criticism from some Republicans. Separately, President Joe Biden announced more than $8bn in military aid for Ukraine on Thursday.

Turkey held its biggest-ever bond sale, raising $3.5bn in funds. The country supported the sale with a buyback of around $1.9bn, allowing investors to swap their holdings for newer bonds (and reducing the debt that it needs to repay in the short term). The sale's success suggests international investors are regaining confidence in Turkey after a years-long economic malaise.

Land access to a critical port in Haiti's capital, Port-au-Prince, was reportedly suspended following attacks by armed gangs that control much of the city. According to Reuters, shots were fired at ships this week. Gang violence has dogged the Caribbean country for years; since June hundreds of Kenyan police officers have arrived as part of a UN-approved effort to restore order.

Newsmax, an American right-wing television station, settled a lawsuit with Smartmatic, a voting-machine company, shortly after parties began selecting the jury. Smartmatic had accused Newsmax of spreading conspiracy theories about the integrity of its machines in the wake of Donald Trump's defeat in the 2020 presidential election. Dominion, another voting-technology firm, won a \$787m settlement from Fox News in a similar lawsuit last year.

Figure of the day: 45%, the share of YouTube viewing in America that takes place on TV screens. Read the full story.

Who will be Japan's next leader?

On Friday all eyes in Japan will be on the results of the ruling Liberal Democratic Party's leadership race. The winner will become Japan's prime minister, replacing Kishida Fumio, the LDP's current leader. The contest among nine contenders has been unusually chaotic.

Three candidates appear to have the best chances. Koizumi Shinjiro would bring generational change. The 43-year-old promotes socially progressive policies (such as allowing married couples to use different surnames) and industrial reform. Ishiba Shigeru, a former defence minister who has called for an "Asian NATO", has populist flair.

The most divisive pick would be Takaichi Sanae, a hard-right nationalist who would be Japan's first female leader. She has pledged to visit the Yasukuni shrine, which commemorates soldiers who fought in the second world war, including war criminals. That would infuriate China, and could undo the diplomatic work of Mr Kishida, who repaired relations with neighbouring South Korea.

America fortifies its Chinese tariff wall

America is sending tariffs on China sharply upwards. On Friday it will impose higher levies on a range of Chinese-made products: up to 100% on electric vehicles, 50% on solar cells and semiconductors, and 25% on EV batteries, steel, critical minerals and more. The decision, which President Joe Biden's administration first announced in May, stemmed from a review of the tariffs initially slapped on China by Donald Trump when he was in the White House.

Mr Biden's approach is more targeted than Mr Trump's. Whereas the tariffs four years ago sprawled to cover $350bn-worth of imports from China, the new tariffs only hit about $18bn-worth. Yet their effects may be more dramatic. There are few Chinese EVs on American roads now, and with 100% tariffs in place, the market will remain all but closed to them. That may help American carmakers. But it will hinder America's transition towards a greener economy.

The G77 pushes for financial reform

On Friday foreign ministers of the G77, a big group of developing countries, will gather in New York on the sidelines of the UN General Assembly. High up the agenda will be the widening economic gap between G77 members and developed countries and the impact of climate change on poor states.

The group also wants to push for an overhaul of the world's financial architecture. Some leaders argue that the high cost of capital for poor countries reflects unfair risk premiums. Part of the problem, they say, is that developing countries have too little clout at multilateral institutions like the International Monetary Fund.

The G77, often considered a marginal geopolitical force, has been emboldened by shared anger at Western countries among many of its members for doing too little to counter rising debt burdens and to reduce poverty. China is benefiting from this frustration. Although it is not a member of the G77 it has provided financial aid and diplomatic support to it.

A sweet spot for Spain's economy

Spain's politics are increasingly dysfunctional but its economy is performing strongly. This week the government raised its forecast for GDP growth in 2024, from 2.4% to 2.7%, and from 2.2% to 2.4% in 2025. These growth rates are more than double the average growth rates expected in the euro zone. This strong performance has improved the public finances; the fiscal deficit was just 3.6% of GDP last year. Business-confidence data, released on Friday, will probably reflect this rosy outlook.

The robust growth is mostly thanks to a post-pandemic boom in tourism, an influx of aid from the EU and swift job creation. Many of the new jobs are going to immigrants, with more than 1m arriving in the past three years. Pedro Sánchez's minority centre-left coalition failed to get a budget through parliament this year and is unlikely to next. But the strong economic numbers give it some room for manoeuvre.

Sweden's running jamboree

The Lidingoloppet, an annual cross-country foot race, will draw as many as 20,000 competitors to Lidingo, a rocky island suburb of Stockholm, Sweden's capital, from Friday. Launched in 1965, the Lidingoloppet is part of the so-called Swedish Classic, a set of four challenges—including running, swimming, cross-country skiing and cycling—that must be completed within a 12-month period.

The main event is a 30km (18.6 mile) race across difficult terrain that includes steep climbs and descents. The unpredictability of Swedish weather adds to the difficulty. Isaac Chemobo of Kenya set the men's record for this dash, 1:33.33, in 1998. It has stood for longer than most sports records. Yet the reward for winning may mainly be satisfaction. The prize of just $3,000 is relatively mere.

Daily Quiz

The Economist

We will serve you a new question each day this week. On Friday your challenge is to give us all five answers and, as important, tell us the connecting theme. Email your responses (and include mention of your home city and country) by 1700 BST on Friday to QuizEspresso@economist.com. We'll pick randomly from those with the right answers and crown three winners on Saturday.

Friday: Bone ash, feldspar and kaolin play are used to make what upmarket household product?

Thursday: Which cricket trophy is the subject of a regular battle between England and Australia?

The winners of last week's crossword

Thank you to everyone who took part in our weekly crossword, published in the weekend edition of Espresso. The winners, chosen at random, were:

Eric Fay, Warsaw, Poland

Danae Penn, Condom, France

David M. Livingstone, Winterthur, Switzerland

They all gave the correct answers of silicon chip, Saturn, Oxford, and pastor. Check back tomorrow for this week's crossword.

45%

The share of YouTube viewing in America that takes place on TV screens.

Read the full story.

We cannot make events. Our business is wisely to improve them.

Samuel Adams