

Catch up: Myanmar death toll rises; protests in Turkey

Myanmar's junta said that the death toll from a 7.7 magnitude earthquake that struck on Friday had reached almost 1,650. Earlier General Min Aung Hlaing, the junta's head, appealed for international assistance to deal with the aftermath. America, ASEAN, China and the EU are among those pledging to help. In neighbouring Thailand authorities declared a state of emergency in Bangkok, where at least ten people died.

Tens of thousands rallied in Istanbul as protests intensified over the arrest of Ekram Imamoglu, the city's mayor and main opposition rival to Turkey's president, Recep Tayyip Erdogan. Turkish authorities have cracked down harshly on such demonstrations, arresting almost 2,000 people since Mr Imamoglu's detention for alleged corruption on March 19th. Experts consider the charges baseless.

One of Elon Musk's companies, xAI, bought another, X, for $33bn. Mr Musk said the deal to join together the artificial-intelligence lab and social-media platform would lead to the combining of "data, models, compute, distribution and talent”. xAI is among the most valuable parts of Mr Musk’s harried empire.

Denmark snapped back against America’s vice-president, who had criticised its protection of Greenland. During a visit to the autonomous Danish territory on Friday, J.D. Vance claimed Denmark had failed to keep the vast island “safe” from Russia and China. Denmark’s foreign minister said the country did “not appreciate the tone” of the comments. Mr Vance’s boss, Donald Trump, has repeatedly called for America to take over the island.

Police in India said the country’s security services killed at least 16 people during an operation targeting Maoist insurgents in Chhattisgarh, a central state. The clash in the town of Sukma also injured two security officers, officials said. The government of Narendra Modi has promised to stamp out the hard-left insurgency, leading to an increase in such clashes in recent years.

American stocks tumbled amid mounting concerns that Donald Trump’s tariffs could stoke inflation. The Dow dropped by over 700 points, or 1.7%, when markets closed on Friday; the S&P fell by 2%. Earlier the Federal Reserve’s preferred inflation gauge, the core personal consumption expenditures price index, rose by 0.4% month on month in February, the biggest jump in a year.

The former boss of Frank was convicted in a New York federal court for defrauding JPMorgan, a bank. In 2021 Charlie Javice sold the platform, which helped Americans apply for student financial aid, to JPMorgan for $175m. She was charged with faking a customer list that dramatically inflated the start-up’s client base. She could face decades in prison.

Word of the week: Hatarakanai ojisan, a Japanese term meaning “older men who don’t work”, used by younger employees to describe senior colleagues who contribute little. Read the full story.

*Donald Trump has begun his second term at a blistering pace.
Keep up with his executive orders, legal challenges against them and what Americans think about it all on our presidential tracker.*

Trump's crackdown on campus protests

In recent weeks the Trump administration has detained several people who took part in pro-Palestinian demonstrations at American universities last year. It is trying to deport them, even though they hold green cards or student visas. Videos of the arrests, by plain-clothes immigration officers, have shocked free-speech advocates. But the administration broadcast its plans in January, when Donald Trump signed an executive order to combat antisemitism. The White House warned “ Hamas sympathisers ” that “we will find you, and we will deport you.”

On Sunday the heads of executive agencies are due to report on the actions they have taken to comply. The Department of Education, accusing Columbia University of failing to protect civil rights, cancelled $400m in federal grants to the school. (Columbia agreed to the government’s demands in a bid to regain the funds.) To deport legal residents, the administration is relying on an obscure law that allows the secretary of state to deem non-citizens to be risks to America’s foreign policy. Marco Rubio said his department has canceled at least 300 student visas.

South Korea's wobbly economy

South Korea's economy had a shaky start to 2025. In January industrial output—which makes up a big share of South Korea's GDP—fell by 2.7% from its level in December, the steepest fall since the pandemic. The figures were a turnaround from those one month earlier, when output rose by 2.3%. On Monday the government releases industrial-production data for February, which will show whether January's decline continued.

Exports of semiconductors, South Korea's largest export, fell in February, according to ING, a bank. That slowdown will weigh on February's output figures. Waning demand for Korean cars in some markets could also hurt output. Exports rose in February by 17.7% year on year, probably because carmakers were rushing shipments to avoid tariffs that Donald Trump plans to impose. The outlook for the economy is increasingly dark. Last month the Bank of Korea lowered its GDP growth forecast for 2025 from 1.9% to 1.5%.

Muslims celebrate Eid al-Fitr

Breakfast is back. This weekend Muslims will celebrate Eid al-Fitr, which marks the end of the month-long Ramadan fast. The holiday will probably begin at sunset on Saturday in some countries, and sunset on Sunday in others (depending on when locals spot the crescent moon). Muslims typically dress up for early-morning prayers and then spend the day visiting friends and relatives. The holiday draws a line under four weeks of dusk-to-dawn denial: fasting is forbidden on the first day of Eid.

Across the Arab world, the holiday will bring a range of emotions. During the Syrian civil war, Eid was often a time when Bashar al-Assad made one of his rare public appearances. He fled the country in December; Syrians will now celebrate the holiday for the first time since the end of his dictatorship. In Gaza, meanwhile, this will be another sombre Eid: Israel has resumed its war against Hamas and cut off the supply of humanitarian aid into the besieged territory.

Pain and pirouettes at figure skating's big contest

In January a collision between a passenger aeroplane and an American military helicopter in Washington, DC killed 67 people, 28 of whom were skaters, coaches and family members returning from a competition in Wichita, Kansas. Their lives were commemorated at a ceremony to mark the opening of the world championships in Boston on Wednesday. The tragedy added to the complex mix of feelings surrounding this year's event, which concludes on Sunday.

For these are also the third consecutive championships without any Russian competitors, who were banned from competing after Russia invaded Ukraine. While some skaters who previously represented Russia now compete for other nations, the absence of the sport's most successful team has created opportunities for American, Japanese and South Korean skaters. It is still unclear whether the ban will be lifted for the 2026 Winter Olympics. That the world championships are a qualification event for the Games creates additional difficulties for the Russians' potential return.

Lock, stock and ten clichés in “MobLand”

Luke Varley/Paramount+

Audiences have not rushed to see Guy Ritchie’s films in cinemas lately, but they have been more than happy to watch his television series at home. “The Gentlemen”, a Netflix spin-off of his film of the same name, was a hit last year. Now the director of “Lock, Stock and Two Smoking Barrels”, a British gangster caper from 1998, is part of the team behind another series. “MobLand”, a collaboration between Mr Ritchie and Ronan Bennett, a screenwriter, streams on Paramount+ from Sunday.

Pierce Brosnan and Helen Mirren enjoy themselves as the heads of an Irish crime family in London. Tom Hardy plays the fixer who cleans up their messes—the latest involving the disappearance of a rival gangster’s son. “MobLand” is as familiar as its generic title suggests, but its similarity to Mr Ritchie’s other violent romps should appeal to his fans. If you enjoy seeing sweary geezers stabbing each other in East End pubs, Mr Ritchie is still the guy for you.

Weekly crossword

We now publish an interactive edition of our crossword, allowing you to enter and check the answers, and see explanations, instantly. Try it here. Or, if you prefer to do things the old-fashioned way, use the grid below.

Our crossword has two sets of clues, one for seasoned cruciverbalists and the other for less experienced solvers. Both give the same answers, all of which feature in articles in this week's edition of The Economist:

Cryptic clues

1 down Employer of unexpected guest let in chat at fault? (3,8)

1 across Take thanks first for duty (6)

2 across Little penal enclosure for politician (2,3)

3 across Carney announced national approval date at first here (6)

Factual clues

1 down Publication whose editor-in-chief was added to a surprising group chat (3,8)

1 across Levy on imports, frequently imposed and rescinded by Donald Trump (6)

2 across Leader of hard-right party, perhaps disappointed by America's disregard for Europe (2,3)

3 across Country whose impending election has recently become a lot more interesting (6)

Email all four answers, along with your home city and country, by 9am BST on Monday to crossword@economist.com. We will pick randomly from those with the right answers and crown three winners in next week's edition.

The winners of this week's quiz

The Economist

Thank you to everyone who took part in this week's quiz. The winners, chosen at random, were:

Yuval Gazit, Newton, Massachusetts, America

Anneli Hildeman, Stockholm, Sweden

Katarzyna Samocka, Warsaw, Poland

They all gave the correct answers of: Venice, Richard Rogers, Henry Ford, Windsor, Edward Lear. The theme is Shakespeare plays: The Merchant of Venice, Richard II (and III), Henry IV (and V and VI), The Merry Wives of Windsor and King Lear

The questions were:

Monday: The acronym DOGE is much in the news. But which Italian city was ruled by a Doge until 1797?

Tuesday: Which composer wrote musicals such as Carousel and South Pacific with Oscar Hammerstein II as the lyricist?

Wednesday: Which American car magnate was a notorious antisemite and was awarded the “Grand Cross of the German Eagle” by the Nazis?

Thursday: In 1917, the British royal house changed its name from Saxe-Coburg and Gotha to what?

Friday: Which Victorian poet wrote “The Owl and the Pussycat”?

Fantasy, abandoned by reason, produces impossible monsters; united with it, she is the mother of the arts and the origin of marvels.

Francisco Goya