

The world in brief

Catch up quickly on the global stories that matter

Donald Trump urged Volodymyr Zelensky, Ukraine's president, to meet Vladimir Putin, his Russian counterpart, whether or not a ceasefire is in place. In response Mr Zelensky said that he “will wait for Putin on Thursday in Turkey”, but also that he expected a “complete and lasting” ceasefire from Monday. Earlier Mr Putin ignored a European call for a ceasefire and instead suggested “direct talks” with Ukraine.

Scott Bessent, Mr Trump's treasury secretary, hailed “substantial progress” in trade talks between America and China. These are the first face-to-face negotiations since Mr Trump imposed tariffs of 145% on China, which responded with 125% levies of its own. In a social media post, Mr Trump acclaimed a “A total reset negotiated in a friendly, but constructive, manner.”

Israel's foreign minister, Gideon Saar, said that his country fully endorses Mr Trump's plan for getting humanitarian aid into Gaza. Under the proposal, a new private foundation supported by the American government would set up distribution sites secured by private American military contractors and manned by aid workers. UN officials worry that this would endanger their staff.

India and Pakistan accused each other of “violations” hours after agreeing to a ceasefire. Reports emerged of shelling and explosions near the border between both countries which each side blamed on the other. Earlier America's secretary of state said that the South Asian neighbours would “start talks on a broad set of issues at a neutral site” (something that neither has confirmed).

America and Iran completed the latest round of talks about the latter's nuclear programme. An Iranian spokesman said they had been “difficult” but “useful.” American negotiators were at least encouraged, and said the two sides will meet again. Steve Witkoff, the American envoy leading the talks, has said a uranium-enrichment programme “can never exist in the state of Iran ever again.”

Britain’s home secretary outlined “a fundamental shift” in the country’s immigration system. Yvette Cooper promised to cut 50,000 lower-skilled visas this year. Some industries, such as construction, will still be able to recruit from abroad during a transition period, but others will have to train people in Britain instead Bangladesh’s interim government banned the country’s former ruling party, the Awami League, from all political activity under an anti-terrorism law. The Awami League and its leader, Sheikh Hasina, were ousted last year following a massive uprising during which they are accused of killing hundreds of protesters. The party dismissed the decision as “illegal”. The ban will remain in place until a tribunal completes an investigation.

Kosmos 482, a Soviet spacecraft launched in 1972, crashed down somewhere over the Indian Ocean. The 500kg probe was intended to travel to Venus but got stuck in Earth’s orbit. Keen space-watchers hoping to follow its descent will have been disappointed by its unknown resting place, though with more than 14,000 satellites in orbit there is plenty more space junk to fall.

Word of the week: Webtoons, digital comics whose global market was worth some $9bn in 2024. Read the full story.

Photograph: AP

Saudi Arabia's oil-price dilemma

Saudi Aramco, the kingdom's national oil company, released first-quarter results. As had been expected, profits of $26bn represented a fall of 4.6% from the same period the previous year. Aramco can blame low oil prices, partly due to Donald Trump's tariff wars.

But Aramco—supplier of about 10% of the world's crude oil—is also being hampered by its own political masters. Since last month the Organisation of the Petroleum Exporting Countries and its allies, or OPEC+, which Saudi Arabia leads, has twice cranked up output by more than expected. That has helped push prices down by 15% since early April.

Having cut production by some 6m b/d in recent years, the group appears keen to claw back market share. But Saudi Arabia also wants to punish members of OPEC+ that produce more than their quotas, such as Iraq and Kazakhstan. Saudi Arabia can probably cope better with price slumps, but the cheats are showing no signs of toeing the line. Prices may have to fall further still.

Oil and toil

Saudi Aramco, net profit, $bn

Source: LSEG Workspace

Photograph: Getty Images

India and Pakistan step back from the brink

For 18 days following a terrorist attack in India-controlled Kashmir tensions between India and Pakistan had been mounting. On Saturday the two nuclear-armed powers struck military air bases and cities far beyond Kashmir. But just as the first signs of a nuclear stand-off were emerging, Donald Trump fired a welcome salvo. Writing on social media, America's president said both sides had agreed to a "FULL AND IMMEDIATE CEASEFIRE". So far the truce seems to be holding along the two countries' 3,000km border, though there are reports of explosions in Kashmir.

What now? Marco Rubio, America's secretary of state, said that both sides have committed "to start talks on a broad set of issues at a neutral site". Neither India nor Pakistan, however, has confirmed whether such discussions will take place and what they would entail. The outcome of any potential negotiations is unclear. And a bigger question remains: how long will peace hold before the conflict reignites? For now, though, both India and Pakistan are claiming victory.

Photograph: Alamy

Nuclear talks between America and Iran

Envoys from America and Iran met on Sunday for their fourth round of nuclear talks. The past three yielded positive statements but little progress, as, it seems, did this one. Iran said talks had been “difficult but useful to better understand each other’s positions”. America merely looked forward to the next meeting.

America seems unsure what it wants from the negotiations. President Donald Trump said on Wednesday that he has not decided whether a new deal should allow Iran to continue enriching uranium—perhaps the most important question in the negotiations. Asked about enrichment at a think-tank event on the same day, J.D. Vance, the vice-president, seemed to argue both sides of the issue.

Abbas Araghchi, the Iranian foreign minister, was due to visit Saudi Arabia and Qatar on Saturday. The timing is no coincidence: Mr Trump will visit both countries, along with the United Arab Emirates, on a four-day trip next week. Gulf states will urge America’s president to make a deal with Iran; the alternative is war.

Photograph: ITV STUDIOS

The best of British television

The BAFTA Film Awards are often criticised for focusing too much on Hollywood, but the British Academy's small-screen equivalent pays more attention to homegrown fare. At Sunday's BAFTA Television Awards ceremony in London, Richard Gadd's semi-autobiographical stalking drama, "Baby Reindeer", is sure to add a few trophies to an already glittering collection.

Three very different literary adaptations may be among the other winners: "Slow Horses", based on Mick Herron's spy thrillers; "Rivals", a reimagining of Jilly Cooper's 1980s romp; and "Wolf Hall: The Mirror and the Light", an adaptation of the final novel in Hilary Mantel's Tudor trilogy.

"Mr Bates vs the Post Office" (pictured) should have a red-letter day, too. ITV will receive a special award for commissioning the series, which is also nominated in the actor, actress and limited drama categories. It has already forced politicians to put right the Post Office's Horizon IT scandal, considered one of Britain's worst miscarriages of justice. That counts for more than even the shiniest trophy.

Illustration: The Economist

Mini crossword

We now publish an interactive edition of our crossword twice a week, allowing you to enter and check the answers, and see explanations, instantly. Try it here. Or, if you prefer to do things the old-fashioned way, use the grid below.

Our crossword has two sets of clues, one for seasoned cruciverbalists and the other for less experienced solvers. Both give the same answers, all of which feature in articles in this week's edition of The Economist:

Email all four answers, along with your home city and country, by 9am GMT on Monday to [\[email protected\]](#). We will pick randomly from those with the right answers and crown three winners in next week's edition.

Cryptic clues

1 across Ayatollah or Emir encircles Asian city (6)

2 across A headless brain gets scrambled in African capital(5)

3 across Musical-sounding country (6)

1 down Sadly, we clean wrong for Victor in Singapore (12)

Factual clues

1 across Big city 30km from Muridke (6)

2 across Nigerians spent 16.5trn of them in 2023 on off-grid power (5)

3 across Premature entrant to eurozone (6)

1 down Man who led his party to victory in an election on May 3rd (12)

Image: The Economist

Illustration: The Economist

The winners of this week's quiz

Thank you to everyone who took part in this week's quiz. The winners, chosen at random, were:

Ian Meades, Walla Walla, Washington, America

Gregor Peltri, Leipzig, Germany

Guntars Silders, Hamilton, Ontario, Canada

They all gave the correct answers of Fantasy Island, Russian roulette, the Italian Stallion, Julius Caesar and The French Connection. The theme is salad dressings; thousand island, Russian, Italian, Caesar and French

The questions were:

Monday: Which tv show starred Ricardo Montalban as Mr Roarke and Herve Villechaize as his assistant, Tattoo?

Tuesday: What deadly game does Christopher Walken play in a memorable scene in The Deer Hunter?

Wednesday: What was Rocky Balboa's nickname in the boxing movies?

Thursday: Which Shakespeare play features the line "Cry 'Havoc!' and let slip the dogs of war"?

Friday: In which film did Gene Hackman win his first Oscar?

When you finish a creation, take something off. Diminish, diminish, diminish.

Joan Crawford