

Catch up: Ukraine claims control of Russian town; stocks bounce back

Volodymyr Zelensky, Ukraine's president, said his country's troops had gained complete control of the Russian town of Sudzha, in the Kursk border region. With a pre-evacuation population of around 5,000, it is the largest town to fall during Ukraine's surprise, ten-day incursion. Earlier, Alexander Lukashenko, Belarus's president, called on Russia and Ukraine to end their "scuffle" in an interview that will be broadcast on Russian state media.

Buoyant trading on Wall Street continued into Asian stockmarkets, as investors were heartened by strong economic data from America. Jobless claims there are at a five-week low and retail sales in July beat economists' forecasts. The S&P 500 hit its highest level since late July, fully recovering from the market rout of two weeks ago. Japan's Topix index was up by 2% in morning trading.

China said it would screen people and goods entering the country for mpox over the next six months. On Wednesday the World Health Organisation declared an outbreak of the viral infection to be a global health emergency, after it spread beyond the Democratic Republic of Congo to other African countries. On Thursday Sweden confirmed the first case of a deadly new strain of mpox outside of Africa.

The White House said it expects Medicare, a federal health agency, to save $6bn in 2026 after negotiating lower prices for ten widely used drugs. The price of insulin products made by Novo Nordisk, a Danish firm, will fall by 76% from the start of that year. The price of januvia—another diabetes drug—will drop by 79%. Kamala Harris, America's vice-president, touted the achievement as she continued her campaign for the presidency.

Israeli settlers attacked a Palestinian village in the occupied West Bank, killing at least one person, according to the Palestinian health ministry. The number of attacks by Israeli settlers on Palestinians in the West Bank has risen sharply since Hamas's attack on Israel on October 7th. Israeli political leaders and the army condemned the latest violence. Palestinians often accuse Israeli security forces of giving violent settlers free rein.

A Russian court sentenced Ksenia Karelina, a Russian-American citizen, to 12 years in prison. Ms Karelina was convicted of treason after donating $51 to a pro-Ukraine charity while living in America in 2022. She was arrested while visiting her family in Russia earlier this year. Ms Karelina's lawyer said he hopes she could be freed in a future prisoner swap between Russia and the West.

Walmart reported that revenue in the three months to July grew by 4.8% year on year, despite fears that it would be bruised by a slowdown in consumer spending. The American retail giant also raised its forecast for profit growth this financial year from between 4% and 6% to between 6.5% and 8%. The firm said that sales are being buoyed by well-off consumers switching to its low-cost goods.

Figure of the day: 380m yuan, the amount of money (equivalent to $53m) that corpse-stealers are believed to have made from a scheme in China. Read the full story.

Correction: In yesterday's edition we wrote that Columbia University's president, Minouche Shafik, testified in Congress alongside the presidents of Harvard and the University of Pennsylvania. In fact their testimony was separate and came earlier. Sorry.

As America prepares to vote in national elections in November, keep abreast of the political news by reading The US in brief, our daily update. Sign up to receive it as a newsletter each weekday.

What next for Ukraine's Russia raid

Ukraine's surprise incursion into Russia continues. Ukrainian forces are advancing in multiple directions within the Kursk region. Some troops are up to 40km beyond the border. On Thursday Belgorod became the second Russian border province to declare a state of emergency. But while Ukraine is still capturing small villages, the advance is stalling around larger towns. The Russians, initially sluggish to respond, are fortifying positions. This includes digging trenches in front of the region's nuclear power station and around Kursk city, the regional capital.

The raid probably aimed to distract Russian forces from the front in Ukraine. Yet Russia's generals seem hesitant to divert firepower from frontlines in the Kharkiv region and the Donbas, where they are inflicting significant damage. Still, Ukraine may now have more ambitious objectives, such as maintaining a long-term presence inside Russia. On Wednesday Ukraine's deputy prime minister said the country intended to establish a "security zone" in Russia to shield against assaults on Ukrainian territory.

The Inflation Reduction Act two years on

President Joe Biden signed the Inflation Reduction Act into law two years ago on Friday. His flagship legislation sought to spur America's green revolution by making hundreds of billions of dollars available to clean-energy projects. The idea was not just to make America greener, but to create lots of high-quality, well-paid jobs on American soil, especially in struggling parts of the country left behind by deindustrialisation and globalisation.

Two years on, however, and there is little evidence of an IRA boost. Implementation has been beset by numerous delays. Wage growth among poorer Americans has easily outpaced that enjoyed by richer folk, but left-behind areas continue to lag the national average in job growth. The share prices of green-energy companies, such as those that make solar panels and wind turbines, trail the broader market. The benefits may come eventually—but by then the 2024 election will be long gone.

Thailand gets a new prime minister

Paetongtarn Shinawatra (pictured) became the third member of her family to lead Thailand on Friday, when parliament approved her as the country's new prime minister. On Wednesday a court ordered the previous one, Srettha Thavisin, to step down because of an ethics violation.

Ms Paetongtarn, who is 37 years old, is the daughter of Thaksin Shinawatra, a populist overthrown in a coup d'état in 2006. Her aunt, Yingluck Shinawatra, was also prime minister, from 2011 to 2014. She, too, was forced out by the army.

Ms Paetongtarn's lineage may be a disadvantage. Her father is still seen as the dominant force in their party, Pheu Thai, which is now in coalition with some of the same royalist generals who toppled him. Authorities have charged him with lèse-majesté, insulting the king. One wrong move by Ms Paetongtarn could land her father in jail.

America's election is now a toss-up

The Economist's forecast of America's presidential election gives the Democratic nominee, Kamala Harris, a 52% chance of winning. That is a dramatic turnaround for the Democrats. On the day before Joe Biden dropped out of the race our forecast gave him a 24% chance of defeating Donald Trump. With almost three months to go, the election is neck and neck.

Our forecast combines opinion polling and “fundamentals” (such as the state of the economy and historical voting patterns) to predict the likelihood of various outcomes. So far, Ms Harris has had strong polling nationally and is doing better than Mr Biden in swing states. If this continues, she will become the favourite to win the election. But the bounce from positive media coverage, which will probably continue during the Democratic National Convention next week, could be short lived. Polls will only begin to settle in September, when voters will begin to make their final choices.

A British Muslim love story on stage

Towns and cities in England and Northern Ireland are still in shock from far-right riots this month, set off by false reports that a Muslim asylum-seeker was the knifeman who killed three girls in Southport, in north-west England. Among the rioters' targets were mosques. Islamophobia has long been the focus of Suhaiymah Manzoor-Khan, a British-Pakistani poet and author, whose work appears timely.

Her debut play, “Peanut Butter and Blueberries”, runs this month at the Kiln Theatre in London. The two-person show tells the story of Bilal and Hafsah, British-Pakistani Muslims who become close at university. The script is funny and thoughtful. Most memorably, perhaps, Ms Manzoor-Khan has invented characters who actually like being Muslim—something she suggests is missing from the stage. The result is a love story that subtly explores the rich lives of two young people.

Daily quiz

The Economist

We will serve you a new question each day this week. On Friday your challenge is to give us all five answers and, as important, tell us the connecting theme. Email your responses (and include mention of your home city and country) by 1700 BST on Friday to QuizEspresso@economist.com. We'll pick randomly from those with the right answers and crown three winners on Saturday.

Friday: Mick Taylor and Brian Jones were former members of which rock group?

Thursday: Primum movens, a Latin term sometimes used to argue for the existence of God, has what meaning in English?

The winners of last week's crossword

Thank you to everyone who took part in our weekly crossword, published in the weekend edition of Espresso. The winners, chosen at random, were:

Ian Makin, Oxford, Britain

Christine Reiter, Paris, France

Willy Zimmer, Casper, Wyoming, America

They all gave the correct answers of swing states, siesta, glove, and school. Check back tomorrow for this week's crossword.

380m yuan

*The amount of money (equivalent to $53m) that corpse-stealers are believed to have made from a scheme in China.
Read the full story.*

Gather the flowers, but spare the buds.

Andrew Marvell