Catch up quickly on the global stories that matter

America and Ukraine signed a deal that gives America access to Ukraine's mineral deposits and creates a joint investment fund. Scott Bessent, America's treasury secretary, said that the agreement shows Russia that the Trump administration wants a “peace process centered on a free, sovereign, and prosperous Ukraine over the long term”. The deal will now go to Ukraine's parliament for approval.

President Donald Trump blamed weak economic data on the Biden administration and claimed that tariffs played no role in dwindling stockmarkets. On Wednesday official data showed America's economy shrank by an annualised 0.3% in the first quarter, the first contraction in three years. The dramatic drop—from 2.4% growth at the end of 2024—was accompanied by a deepening trade deficit.

Shehbaz Sharif, Pakistan's prime minister, urged India to “act responsibly” after his government claimed it had “credible intelligence” that its nuclear-armed neighbour is poised to launch a military strike. Tensions have mounted between the countries after attackers in India-controlled Kashmir killed 25 tourists and a local last week. India argues that Pakistan backs the militants behind the attack, a claim Pakistan denies.

Microsoft's shares rose by up to 9% in after-hours trading in New York after it posted better-than-expected results. Revenue in the third quarter increased by 13% to $70.1bn, while net income rose by 18% to $25.8bn. The world's biggest software maker reported revenue growth of 20% in its cloud-computing services. Demand for its services has stayed strong despite economic uncertainty.

Britain said that, in a joint operation with America, it carried out strikes on Houthi rebels in Yemen. John Healey, Britain's defence secretary, said that the mission targeted buildings where Houthis make drones they use to attack commercial ships in the Red Sea. The strikes were the first that Britain has participated in since Mr Trump took office.

Israel said its air forces struck “operatives” who had allegedly attacked Druze civilians in Syria. Sectarian violence broke out this week near Damascus, the capital; around 40 people have been killed. Syria said it deployed soldiers to “restore security and stability”. Israel had already threatened to intervene in recent clashes between Druze militias and government forces in Syria, which Druze leaders opposed.

A rule prohibiting Taiwanese passport-holders from entering Somalia came into effect on Wednesday. Taiwan says Somalia does not recognise the island as independent from China; its government accused China of instigating the ban and urged Somalia to “immediately” revoke it. Diplomatic ties between Taiwan and Somaliland, a breakaway republic, have angered both Somalia and China.

Donald Trump's slowing economy

The damage that Donald Trump is doing to the American economy is starting to come into focus. On Wednesday the Bureau of Economic Analysis reported quarterly GDP going negative for the first time since the start of 2022. That data marks a sharp deceleration from the average quarterly expansion of nearly 3% in annualised terms during Joe Biden's presidency. Yet there will still be debate about how to interpret the dramatic slowdown since Mr Trump took office in late January.

The main cause of the dreary data will be a surge in imports, as companies and consumers have tried to get ahead of tariffs. Arithmetically, higher imports subtract from GDP. At the same time, any build-up in inventories will have added to GDP, for now. Looking through those factors, the evidence paints a picture of a slowdown that has been gradual, so far—but may turn more severe in the coming months.

China braces for tariff landfall

“Have you heard of the eye of the storm?” asks a new video posted by China’s Ministry of Foreign Affairs. The centre of a tropical cyclone can appear deceptively calm. But it is actually a “deadly trap”. The world economy is caught in a similar predicament, the ministry argues, thanks to the “tariff storm” America has conjured up. President Donald Trump’s exorbitant levies on Chinese goods went into effect on April 9th. But as container ships chug slowly across the Pacific, American shoppers are still waiting to feel the full impact.

China’s exporters are registering the effects first. On Wednesday China’s National Bureau of Statistics and Caixin, a business magazine, each released monthly surveys of manufacturers. They both showed a marked decline in new export orders as American buyers reduced purchases to avoid the new tariffs. The eye of the storm may be calm. But the impending havoc is visible for those who look.

Myanmar's junta ends its fake ceasefire

At midnight in Myanmar, a ceasefire declared by the country's junta after a devastating earthquake a month ago will come to an official end. Nothing, however, will change on the ground. The army never observed the ceasefire.

The earthquake that struck on March 28th killed over 3,000 people and injured a further 4,600 or so. It devastated Naypyidaw, the junta's capital; the damage is so bad that some ministries have moved back to Yangon, the capital until 2005. The second-largest city, Mandalay, was hit hard, too. But rather than redirecting resources towards rescue and recovery, the generals stepped up attacks on ethnic armed groups and anti-junta insurgents who have been fighting the army since it took power in a coup d'état in 2021. The subsequent civil war has displaced over 4m people, and left thousands dead. Tragically, there is no end in sight.

Volkswagen idles in the trade wars

Europe's largest carmaker published dreadful final results for the first quarter on Wednesday. Though sales for Volkswagen improved by around 3% year on year to €78bn ($89bn), operating profit dropped by around 40% to €2.9bn, compared with €4.6bn a year ago. The German group is spending to meet the EU's new emissions regulation and a costly restructuring of CARIAD, its automotive-software company.

Bosses trying to plan around Donald Trump's tariffs will be tearing their hair out. In the latest twist, America's president largely reversed course on additional tariffs on imported car parts, which had been planned to take effect this weekend. vw runs a big car plant in Chattanooga, Tennessee. And Audi (part of the vw group) is planning to build a factory in America. The carmaker left its forecast of up to 5% sales growth unchanged, but did not factor in American tariffs. They will no doubt have a big impact.

Fifty years since the fall of Saigon

Fighter jets soared above tanks and troops in Ho Chi Minh City on Wednesday. Vietnam's business capital is marking the 50th anniversary of "reunification day" with huge military parades, fireworks and drone shows. On April 30th 1975 soldiers from communist North Vietnam captured the city—then called Saigon—from American-backed South Vietnam, ending the Vietnam war. The Communists soon united the country under their rule. They have remained in power since.

The fall of Saigon also changed America, for which it was an embarrassing, painful loss. Images of America's evacuation—aboard overloaded helicopters, as some desperate Vietnamese were left behind—became symbolic of the superpower's humbling. The Economist wrote in 1975 that these events damaged America's credibility and potentially threatened its role atop the liberal world order.

In the end, American supremacy endured for decades. But today, as Donald Trump pursues an "America First" foreign policy, the American-led order is again being seriously questioned.
