

The world in brief

Catch up quickly on the global stories that matter

Photograph: Reuters

Israel said it struck a petrochemical plant and air-defence facilities, among other sites, in its first missile attack on Iran since a ceasefire was signed in April. Iran's state media reported explosions in Tehran, the capital. Iran's Islamic Revolutionary Guard Corps said it attacked an Israeli energy site in response; earlier it promised "a full week of continuous strikes".

The exchange of fire between Israel and Iran drove the price of Brent crude, the global oil benchmark, up by 4% to nearly $97 a barrel. Separately OPEC+, a cartel of oil-producing countries, increased output quotas for the fourth consecutive month. The war has hampered the group's energy exports. In February it produced an average of 42m barrels of oil per day. By April, that had fallen to 33m.

Following a meeting with Volodymyr Zelensky in Downing Street, the leaders of Britain, France and Germany issued five necessary conditions for a "just and lasting peace" in Ukraine. Among them were an immediate ceasefire and that "the current line of contact should be the starting point for negotiations." Russia's frozen assets would also remain out of reach until it ends the war and compensates Ukraine.

Asian tech stocks fell on Monday, following a sell-off that left America's NASDAQ index down by more than 4% on Friday. South Korea's stock exchange paused trading after its KOSPI index dropped by more than 8%. Much of that loss was caused by investors dumping shares in Samsung Electronics and SK Hynix, makers of memory chips that are used in AI.

Intesa Sanpaolo, Italy's biggest bank, offered to buy Monte dei Paschi di Siena, a rival, for almost €31bn ($35bn). The offer values MPS at 12.5% more than its nominal worth when markets closed on Friday. On Sunday Banco BPM, another Italian lender, floated the idea of merging with MPS to form a "national champion" with a market value of more than €50bn.

Latvia's defence ministry said NATO jets shot down a drone that entered the country's airspace from Russia. Officials did not say whether it was Ukrainian or Russian. Drone incursions have become increasingly common across eastern Europe in recent months. In May Latvia's coalition government collapsed after a dispute over repeated airspace violations by Ukrainian drones that had been knocked off course by Russian jamming.

The Philippines issued a tsunami alert after a 7.8-magnitude earthquake occurred off Mindanao, its main southern island. Aftershocks continued to hit the country. At least a dozen people died. Ferdinand Marcos, the Philippines' president, promised that the government would "not leave Mindanao behind". Indonesia also issued a tsunami alert, but later lifted it.

Figure of the day: 1.45bn, the population of India, accounting for a sixth of humanity. But, despite widespread poverty, high rates of marriage and relatively young mothers, the fertility rate is falling fast.

Photograph: Reuters

China's dictator visits North Korea's

Xi Jinping arrived in North Korea on Monday for a state visit. The Chinese president's first overseas trip this year will showcase China as a global power capable of friendly relations even with troublemakers.

Underlying the diplomacy is discomfort in China over North Korea's ties with Russia. The two countries agreed to a defence pact in 2024; the regime in Pyongyang has sent troops and weapons to support Russia's war on Ukraine. China wants to draw North Korea closer, timing the visit just before the 65th anniversary of their friendship treaty next month.

Mr Xi is unlikely to spoil the mood by criticising North Korea's nuclear-weapons programme, which it once sought to curtail. Last week Kim Jong Un, North Korea's dictator, toured a uranium-enrichment facility and inspected a new warship. North Korea says its nuclear status is irreversible and Mr Xi is not inclined to argue. America, bogged down in the Middle East, may not be able to do much about it on its own.

Photograph: Reuters

Tata's boardroom drama

Infighting at one of India's most prominent companies threatens to spill over when the board of Tata Trusts, a charity that owns 66% of the sprawling Tata conglomerate, meets on Monday. The board is split on whether to comply with a demand from India's central bank for Tata Sons, the holding company that owns the individual businesses, to list its shares publicly. A listing is a requirement for "shadow banks" over a certain size. Tata Sons falls into that category because of debt held at its subsidiary companies. The board of Tata Sons will meet on Friday.

A more personal feud over succession is also brewing at the top of the Tata empire, which spans everything from airlines to iPhone-assembly plants and jewellery stores. Noel Tata, chair of Tata Trusts, is reportedly pushing to secure an important role for his son, Neville—an attempt that pits him against N. Chandrasekaran, the chair of Tata Sons and the first person with no ties to the family to run the conglomerate.

Photograph: Eyevine

Can Apple's Siri compete with ChatGPT?

Apple's Worldwide Developers Conference, an annual software jamboree, begins on Monday. The company is expected to announce a makeover of Siri, its digital assistant, redesigning its interface to function more like an artificial-intelligence chatbot. Apple has spent far less than other big tech firms on AI-model development. Rather than competing in the model wars, Apple's bosses are betting that ensuring its devices are the main way users get access to AI is the smarter (and cheaper) path.

Apple itself is entering a new era. Tim Cook, the boss, is preparing to hand over to John Ternus on September 1st. Mr Cook's 15-year tenure was an enormous financial success; Apple's market capitalisation grew from $350bn to $4.6trn. But that rise was largely built on products released before he took over. Can Apple produce another smash hit on the scale of the iPhone? The conference may provide a clue.

Core blimey

Apple, market capitalisation, $trn

Source: LSEG Workspace

Photograph: Science Photo Library

The world's ailing oceans

The decline in the health of the oceans is accelerating. The Starfish Barometer, an annual measure of ocean health—published on Monday by Mercator Ocean International, an ocean-monitoring firm—warns that the response is inadequate. Sea levels rose by an average of 4.2mm a year between 2012 and 2025, nearly double the rate of the previous decade, according to the barometer, which measures indicators such as marine life, coral bleaching and plastic pollution. Ocean warming is also escalating. Severe marine heatwaves affected a fifth of the global ocean in June last year.

But there are also hopeful developments. The High Seas Treaty, which took effect in January, aims to protect marine life in nearly two-thirds of the ocean that lies outside national borders. Rules limiting harmful subsidies for fisheries and protections for sharks and rays came into force last year. Plenty of organisations are trying to help; more than 40 funds and over 2,000 startups focus on ocean technology. Still, say the monitors, just 3.2% of the ocean is truly protected.

Illustration: Sandra Navarro

Daily quiz

We will serve you a new question each weekday. On Friday your challenge is to give us all five answers and tell us the theme. Email your responses (and your home city and country) by 1700 GMT on Friday to [\[email protected\]](#). We'll pick three winners at random and crown them on Saturday.

Monday: What is the capital of the Mexican state of Nuevo León?

I doubt if there is anything in the world uglier than a Midwestern city.

Frank Lloyd Wright